crawling through a festival: interstitial report

There was no festivalling done by the inhabitants of Zombie Central last night (day two) as sometimes things like final exams must take precedence. So, I'm sorry Rural Alberta Advantage, Library Voices, Mount Eerie, Azeda Booth, Woodpigeon, Agnostic Mountain Gospel Choir, etc, etc, I really should have been there to cheer you on.

If it helps, here is evidence that I was there in person to cheer on Final Fantasy, this photo shamelessly stolen from the Sled Island webpage:

See? That's me at the very front on the left, the one with the crazy hair and the dark shirt, then the Resident Offspring in yellow, and then my new best friend, the design student, in the white tights. And that's Owen, serenading us, and us alone.

Coming up tomorrow, the lowdown on the blowout in Olympic Plaza.

The venue looks super cool, too.

That certainly looks like an example of the venue actually making the show. What an amazing place! And what a great picture too.

Owen really is a fantastic musician and always puts on such a fabulous show. His screen displays are always a highlight too. Nice to be preserved forever with your boy like that too!

It's a church, Wandering Coyote, and like so many churches, has great acoustics. Ceiling is pretty too, innit?

Yeah, me and Owen, we're likethis, Sean. Sadly, he didn't have his display stuff with him that night, but they are always magnificent, despite the fact that I suspect he swiped the idea from Christine Fellows.

Immortalized forever in zeros and ones, Gifted.
